ABSTRACT

Identification of an affected application program thread to enable error containment and recovery is described. According to one embodiment, an operating system receives an indication of a hardware error associated with an application program thread. The operating system determines the application program thread to be in a user operation mode and terminates the application program.